PORTLAND IS THE KING OF BIKING, BUT CHICAGO MAKES THE TOP 5

Reuters

NEW YORK With the most cyclists per capita and even coffee shops that cater to two-wheelers, Portland, Ore., has been named America's best cycling city, according to a new ranking released Monday.

It knocked Minneapolis, which was tops in 2010, to second place, followed by Boulder, Colo.; Washington, D.C.; and Chicago.

"No other city in the United States has more cyclists per capita," according to Bicycling magazine, which compiled the list of the top 50 best cycling cities.

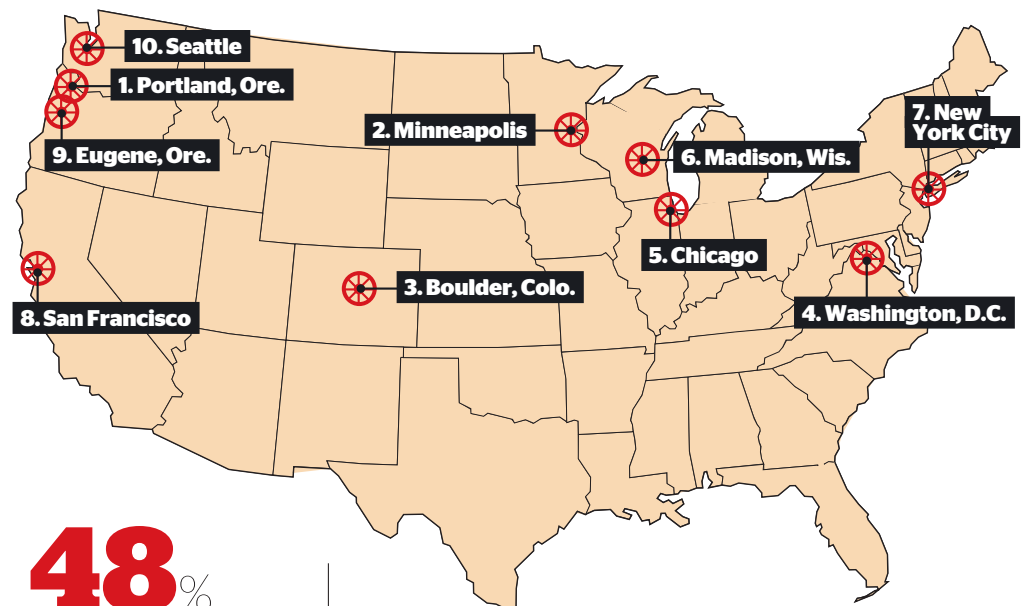

Although cycling culture is thriving in Minneapolis and Boulder boasts the second-highest percentage of bike commuters in the U.S., Portland scored top points in the ranking that evaluated bike culture in cities with 95,000 or more residents.

The magazine, which used data from the Alliance for Biking and Walking and the League of American Bicyclists, also looked at the number and quality of bike lanes, racks, routes and bicycling projects, cyclist-friendly cafes, as well as how many residents commute by bike and cycling clubs and events.

New York City, which will launch the largest bike share system in the country this summer, came in seventh, followed by San Francisco at No. 8.

Memphis was named the most improved city for bicycling.

Wishing riders a good Morgan

GOING PUBLIC

Tracy Swartz

» tswartz@tribune.com
» @tracyswartz

Amid all the fanfare and preparations for the NATO summit, the Chicago Department of Transportation quietly opened the Morgan stop in the West Loop on Friday.

Green and Pink Line riders now can use the station, under construction since the summer of 2010. There were more workers putting finishing touches on the platform than riders waiting for trains Friday morning when Going Public visited the station, off Morgan and Lake streets.

The stop is the second station the CTA has opened in three weeks after years without new stations. The Oakton-Skokie Yellow Line stop debuted in Skokie last month.

There are some very fancy amenities at the Morgan stop. Platforms are covered to shield riders from harsh weather. There also is a covered walkway above the tracks so riders can transfer between platforms amid beautiful views of Chicago's skyline.

The electronic displays are not the typical large stand-alone TV screens at some CTA stations. They are smaller and hang from the platform covering. GP didn't notice any advertisements on the electronic displays Friday.

The bike parking spaces outside the stationhouse are not the standard racks. Riders can lock their bikes to stands fashioned as loops and other interesting shapes.

The CTA estimates the station cost $38 million for design and construction. When the city broke ground on the project two years ago, officials said $30 million in tax increment financing—money intended to promote redevelopment in certain areas in the city—would help pay for the station.

The remainder of the funding comes from federal and state grants, according to the CTA. Final costs will not be known until finishing details are complete.

STATIONARY

A weekly dispatch from a CTA station of note

This week: LaSalle/Van Buren

Like a Golden Girl who's having trouble hiding her age, the LaSalle/Van Buren stop could use a face-lift—or at least a little makeup. The Loop station was built in the late 1800s and it shows. Paint is peeling off the walls and the stairwell leading to the platform. Rust seems to be the No. 1 visitor to the station. Just a good scrub and a few coats of paint would broaden the appeal of this station. Better to have appeal than a peel.

Next up: 35th/Archer Orange Line

Some people have anxiously been awaiting the station's arrival.

Roger Romanelli, executive director of the Randolph-Fulton Market Association, said his economic development group has been pushing for the station for the past decade. A Green Line stop nearby at Halsted and Lake streets was shuttered in the mid-1990s.

"We have a couple of factories located within two blocks of Morgan Street. There's a real high concentration of employees. Very critical for them to have that public transportation option," Romanelli said.

A grand opening ceremony for the Morgan stop is expected in the next few weeks.

Broken record

"EL Stories," the play about commuting in Chicago, opens June 2 with a new cast and script. The play adapts the story of British transit enthusiast Adham Fisher, who recently set a record for the "E" Challenge—riding the entire rail system in one day.

The show runs at 11 p.m. Saturdays through Aug. 18 at the Greenhouse Theater Center, 2257 N. Lincoln Ave. Tickets are $15 at greenhousetheater.org.

WHAT KINDA CASH CAN A COLLEGE GRAD EXPECT THESE DAYS?

MCT

Ah, college. No matter where or how students get their degrees, it's an unforgettable time in anyone's life. The job hunt that comes after? That can be one to remember as well—for better or worse.

And while college students pick their majors for any number of reasons—interest in a particular field of study, ability to get a job post-graduation, amount of education or training needed—many wonder how much they might earn once they enter the workforce. This is particularly true for the graduating Class of 2012, which is diving headfirst into a still sputtering economy that shows no sign of letting up in dealing out its challenges. So what can they expect?

According to the most recent salary survey by the National Association of Colleges and Employers, the average starting salary for a Class of 2012 graduate is $44,442. To break it down further, here's a list of the highest-paying bachelor's degrees within common academic disciplines. Also included is the percent change in starting salaries from the Class of 2011 to the Class of 2012, along with examples of occupations that graduates within each major might pursue.

EDUCATION

Median starting salary:

$42,200

Percent change from 2011: +2.2

The secret to landing a job

Rex Huppke

» rhuppke@tribune.com

It's the time of year when spirited young women and men graduate from the joyous, beer-soaked, afternoon-napping-allowed world of college and enter the soul-crushing, coffee-soaked, afternoon-napping-frowned-upon world of work.

I kid, of course—graduates, you'll love the real world! (No, you won't. ... Return to school immediately. ... I haven't had fun in 20 years. PLEASE TAKE ME WITH YOU!!)

As most of you know, the first post-graduation step is to get the throw-up off the shoes you rented for your graduation ceremony. The next is to get a job, which is unfortunate because there aren't quite as many of those as there used to be.

I consulted with job search experts and business owners to come up with some pragmatic tips for young job seekers—not the “add some zazz to your resume!” or “make sure to wear a power tie” type of advice. Concrete, sensible stuff that fits the modern business world.

Tom Walter is head of a company called Tasty Catering and co-author of the upcoming book “It's My Company Too!” He said the vast majority of companies that are hiring are smaller ones with fewer than 500 employees. Yet many college graduates still are being taught job search and interview approaches tailored for large, monolithic corporations.

Smaller businesses, Walter said, tend to look for employees they believe will fit into the company's culture—they're “hiring for attitude.”

“If you're looking for a job, you don't want to just take something that comes along,” he said. “You need to find a place that matches your core values. That's a place where you'll be recognized, and that's a place where you'll have a better chance of getting hired.”

This requires research. Simply applying for every job you hear about isn't going to get it done. You need to take some time, reflect on what inspires you, talk to people in the field about what they do and then start finding companies that match your desires.

“What they should do is investigate the company and deeply dive into it and figure out if their personal skills and values line up,” Walter said. “Ask about the culture, ask about core values, ask about how they measure your performance.”

“We had this young man come in here once for an interview, and he knew about our culture and he said what was important to him was that he be respected from the day he starts working. That was clearly a differentiator. That stood out.”

That young man got the job.

So the lesson here is that before you find work, you've got to do work. And if it goes right, you'll wind up in a job that's a good fit, which is a rare feat for a person just out of college.

NATO protesters march through the Loop on Monday. WILLIAM DESHAZER/TRIBUNE

OVER AND OUT

CHICAGO EMERGES OK AFTER NATO SUMMIT

Chicago Tribune

Once again, the whole world was watching. But Chicago didn't devolve into 1968 redux. It wasn't the combustible World Trade Organization meeting in Seattle, either.

By that barometer, Chicago's turn as host of the NATO summit could be declared a success.

Protests got rowdy but not wildly out of hand. Security was tight but the city wasn't on lockdown, allowing the business of the summit to proceed. Commuters were inconvenienced but by and large could get where they needed to go—and many decided where they needed to go was nowhere near downtown.

In the end, the summit proved a one-weekend blip on the radar of a major urban metropolis used to crowds, conventions, dignitaries and hoopla.

Mayor Emanuel hailed it as a "milestone" for the city on par with other history-making events.

"By hosting NATO and the NATO summit, we have reinforced, reaffirmed and revitalized Chicago's role on the world stage," Emanuel declared Monday, his first public comments in four days. "While Chicago has the title of second city, because of the NATO summit, we've shown the world that we are a world-class, first-class city."

It will be weeks or even months before anyone can hit a total button on the economic costs or benefits of the gathering to the city.

David Vite, president and CEO of the Illinois Retail Merchants Association, said all the face time Chicago was getting on TV around the world could lead to a payoff in the long term. But Vite also noted that retail activity appeared to slow to a crawl in the part of the city nearest the summit.

"While we don't have any numbers ... for 72 hours it was not a great business weekend," Vite said.

Chicago's existing global profile was underscored by two of the targets that anti-NATO protesters chose to focus their ire on Monday: The international headquarters of aerospace giant Boeing, and the re-election headquarters of the leader of the free world, President Obama.

As part of his closing remarks at the summit, Obama acknowledged that Chicago residents may have had difficulties getting around because of road closures, delegation motorcades and street protests, but said "that's part of the price of being a world city."

5 charged in melee at restaurant

Chicago Tribune

Five men have been charged in connection with a mob attack at the Ashford House Restaurant on Saturday in Tinley Park, officials said.

The melee at the restaurant appears to have been the work of protesters who wanted to attack a gathering of alleged white supremacists, the mayor and a law enforcement source said previously.

Tinley Park Police Chief Steve Neubauer said all five men are charged with aggravated battery, mob action and criminal damage to property. In bond court Monday, bail was set at $250,000 for one man, $200,000 for another, and $175,000 for the rest. Their next court date is set for June 12.

Two men who were with the group that was targeted during the attack also were arrested, Neubauer said.

In court, prosecutors said the victims were members of the Illinois European Heritage Association. Neubauer would not discuss whether they were part of a white supremacist group.

Ten people were injured at the Ashford House Restaurant at 7959 W. 159th St. after 15 to 18 young people, wearing hooded black jackets and wielding bats and hammers, burst inside and attacked another group of 12 to 15 people who were meeting there, officials said.

Mayor Ed Zabracki said police believe the attackers were from a group called Anti-Racist Action, which on its website described the assault as a strike against a gathering of white supremacists.

NATO confirms plan for Afghanistan wind-down

1 NATO mapped an “irreversible” course out of Afghanistan on Monday, but President Obama admitted the Western alliance’s plan to end the deeply unpopular war in 2014 was fraught with risk.

A landmark NATO summit in Chicago endorsed an exit strategy that calls for handing control of Afghanistan to its own security forces by the middle of next year but left major questions unanswered about how to prevent a slide into chaos and a Taliban resurgence after allied troops are gone.

The two-day meeting of the 28-nation military bloc marked a milestone in a war sparked by the Sept. 11 attacks that has spanned three presidential terms and even outlasted al-Qaida leader Osama bin Laden.

Obama and NATO partners sought to show their war-weary voters that the end is in sight in Afghanistan—a conflict that has strained Western budgets as well as patience—while at the same time trying to reassure Afghans that they will not be abandoned.

Alliance leaders acquiesced to new French President Francois Hollande’s insistence on sticking to his campaign pledge to withdraw French troops by Dec. 31, two years ahead of NATO’s timetable. While there was no sign this would send other allies rushing for the exits, leaders could face pressures at home.

The summit’s final communique ratified plans for the NATO-led army to hand over command of all combat missions to Afghan forces by the middle of 2013 and for the withdrawal of most of the 130,000 foreign troops by the end of the following year.

AFTER THE NATO SUMMIT ...

Almost a year to the day after a monster tornado killed 161 people and devastated Joplin, Mo., President Obama was scheduled to deliver the commencement address at the local high school Monday night.

2 Protesters target Lady Gaga concert

Christian groups in the Philippines planned to protest Lady Gaga’s performances there Monday and Tuesday, just after Muslim protests have cast doubt whether she will be allowed to perform in Indonesia.

3 Ex-Rutgers student sentenced to prison

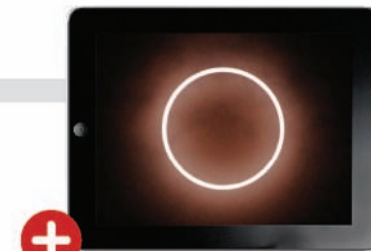

A former Rutgers University student was sentenced Monday to 30 days in prison for a bias crime after he spied on his roommate’s gay encounter in a case that drew national attention to bullying.

4 Lawyers want death penalty in killing spree

Prosecutors will seek the death penalty for a 24-year-old former Marine charged with a “serial thrill-kill spree” that killed four homeless men, a mother and her son, the Orange County, Calif., district attorney said Monday.

5 Mt. Everest climb turns deadly

Three climbers died while descending the summit of Mount Everest, officials said Monday. Two Nepali Sherpa guides died on the mountain last month. At least 236 people have died on the slopes of the giant peak so far.

Some Sox, Cubs could be playing their way out of town

Chris Sosa

» chsosa@tribune.com
» @sayitissosa

Believe it or not, the deck might be stacked in favor of Chicago's baseball teams this season.

Just not in the way most would prefer.

When you're in rebuilding mode, as the Cubs and White Sox are, contending teams come to you when they need to fortify their lineups for a playoff run. The closer it gets to the July 31 trade deadline, the more leverage the sellers will have.

True, neither Chicago team is far enough behind to start panicking. But if things end up going horribly wrong, fans might want to start saying goodbye to some or all of these players.

Sox rookies bloom in pen

Chicago Tribune

About a year ago, Addison Reed still hadn't made the 7 1/2-hour drive from Class A Winston-Salem to Double-A Birmingham, where Nate Jones and Hector Santiago were polishing their skills.

But in a span of 6 1/2 weeks, the three have developed into more than just rookies happy to make the White Sox's opening-day roster.

"It's exciting for us because it's been more than a few games you see us pitch the seventh, eighth and ninth innings with rookies out there," pitching coach Don Cooper said. "And I don't know if there's any other bullpen that has [three] rookies. But it's fun to watch them succeed."

They're learning in different stages. Reed, 23, has become the Sox's unofficial closer and has converted four saves in as many chances. He has been unscored upon in 15 of 16 appearances.

After losing the closer role, Santiago, 24, hasn't allowed a run in his last five outings. And Jones—the only one without prior major-league experience—has a 1.33 ERA in 15 games and is pitching in more prominent situations.

"Coop and [bullpen coach] Juan Nieves have challenged me mentally to attack the strike zone," said Jones, 26. "I've taken to that as my No. 1 goal. It doesn't matter what the score or situation is in the game."

The biggest endorsement of the threesome comes from catcher A.J. Pierzynski, who said the rookies have benefited from having veteran relievers Matt Thornton and Jesse Crain as mentors.

"They belong here, and it's fun to watch and see those guys get better and mature in front of your eyes," Pierzynski said.

Let's make a deal

1. Bryan LaHair

His hot start could be just what the Cubs were looking for—to give hot prospect Anthony Rizzo his big break. No question the last-place Cubs would be even more depressing without LaHair's 10 home runs and 21 RBIs through Monday. However, at 29 years old he's come out of nowhere and might not fit into Theo Epstein's plans.

2. Jake Peavy

He's pitching like he wants another Cy Young Award. If I'm a team with World Series aspirations and a questionable starting rotation (cough, the Yankees, cough), I'm zeroing in on Peavy for the stretch run. I'm also taking out a major insurance policy on him.

3. Ryan Dempster

Is any starting pitcher in the majors having worse luck? Dempster's 2.28 ERA and 44 strikeouts have to be worth more than zero wins, that's for sure. Although his lively interviews and prankish behavior would be missed, giving the 35-year-old a shot at a ring could be the right thing to do.

4. Paul Konerko

Shipping off the team's most beloved player would be a nightmare scenario for fans. Yet Konerko's trade value is through the roof thanks to his .367 average and 23 RBIs. It might be time to cash in before the 36-year-old's numbers tumble off said roof.

5. Adam Dunn

Just kidding. His turnaround is impressive, but after his historically awful 2011, no team's loony enough to absorb that contract.

1 What did NATO leaders think of the Cubs-White Sox game when they visited Wrigley?

After that lopsided series, I'm sure they were considering military intervention.

"We didn't even get on the scoreboard!"

They could have gone to Afghanistan to see a group get wiped out like the Cubs did.

Leaders plan to send footage of Adrian Cardenas at-bats to China to stop reproduction and create blindness.

They all really enjoyed the hot dogs, at least.

2 What did we learn from the Cubs-White Sox series?

When it comes to mediocrity, the Cubs are at least a year away.

The best thing you can do as a Cub is quit.

Only the owners of the Cubs could screw up worse than the team.

Kerry Wood was right: We all need to leave the Cubs on our own terms.

So, 2012—guessing this isn't the Cubs' year.

3 How will Paul Konerko be greeted at the Cell on Tuesday?

With open arms. After that beaming he wants to make sure you're not carrying anything.

With the roar of empty seats.

It'll be slightly overshadowed by "empty seat day" at U.S. Cellular.

With BP Cup goodie-bag after missing awesome BP Cup championship party.

He's going to be a sight for sore eyes.

4 The Bears say Brandon Marshall will be fine. Do you agree?

I agree that he won't cause problems ... because I don't want to be punched in the mouth.

Being fine and fined are two very different things.

They also thought Sam Hurd would look good in orange, so they're kinda right.

"Not getting arrested" = "fine" for all NFL wide receivers these days.

He'll be fine. But the Packers are still in the NFC North. Worry about that.

5 The Indy 500 field is set. Whom do you have winning Sunday's race?

Why's it gotta be about race?!

Jimmy "Chap" Chapin Jr. Probably.

Whichever gas station stocks up on the most flannel shirts and "Terminator" glasses will be declared a winner.

That dude with the funny name from Europe who gives uncomfortable interviews. So, all of them.

A NATO motorcade.

Meet Cheyenne Woods

Tiger's niece sets sights on pro golf's elite

Golf and the name "Woods" go hand in hand. So it should come as no surprise that Tiger Woods' niece, Cheyenne, is on the way up the pro golfing ladder.

The younger Woods, who graduated from Wake Forest University this month after becoming a three-time all-Atlantic Coast Conference golfer, has been signed by agent Mark Steinberg of Excel Sports Management, the group said on its website Monday. That's the same agent her famous uncle uses.

A 21-year-old from Phoenix, Cheyenne Woods averaged 73.7 strokes per round during her senior year at the Winston-Salem, N.C., school. She was named an All-American in 2011 and won two collegiate tournaments during her amateur career.

Woods will seek exemptions to play in LPGA events throughout this season and attend tour qualifying school late in the year, Excel said.

Her father, Earl Jr., is the half-brother of Tiger Woods, the 14-time major champion who is ranked seventh in the official world golf ranking.

NBC adds Beadle to reporting bullpen

ESPN's Michelle Beadle is joining NBC's Olympics, NFL and horse racing coverage as well as "new programming" tailored to her on the NBC Sports Network, it was announced Monday. "I look forward to getting back to New York City and immersing myself in a myriad of NBCUniversal platforms, while trying to kick ass and have some fun along the way," she said in a statement.

Curren$y
REDEYE FILE

Snack rap

By Kyle Kramer | FOR REDEYE

The rapper Curren$y tends to focus on a fairly specific set of lyrical topics—planes, fast cars, hanging out at home, and a certain natural supplement that, when smoked, makes those planes fly a little higher, those cars drive a little slower, and that hanging out at home feel just a little chillier. But when Curren$y (alternately self-designated as Spitta) raps “Xbox Web Browser/ download an updated NBA roster/ play an 82 game season/ condo full of snacks/ Spitta not leaving,” he makes us wonder, above all, just what types of snacks a day at his condo might entail. To prepare for his Wednesday show at Metro, we decided to put together a guide to three styles of getting the munchies so you can choose the perfect snack to share with Spitta.

CURREN$Y

With: The Jets, featuring Smoke DZA, Fiend 4 da Money, Corner Boy P, Trademark and Young Roddy

When: 9 p.m. Wednesday

Where: Metro, 3730 N. Clark St.

Tickets: $21; 18 and over

BEVERAGES

THE COMFORT
FOOD OPTION

“Half rosé chandon/ OJ in my glass/mimosa” (from “American Aquarium”)
You bring the champagne, Curren$y guarantees unlimited juice. Yes, it will be off the hook.

THE DOWN-TO-
BUSINESS OPTION

“My type of [bleep]/ she ran her story to me over grape juice and Ciroc sips” (“She Don’t Want a Man”)
Want to have some real talk with Curren$y? There’s a drink order for that.

THE HIGH-END OPTION

“Tribeca at Bubby’s, I’m enjoying a lemon press/ Not that Minute Maid crap/ They squeeze these lemons theyself” (“Roasted”) Artisanal lemonade? Consider Spitta refreshed. Good call.

BRUNCH

“Tony the Tiger certified these flakes” (from “Jetsgo”).
We’re assuming Curren$y has an entire kitchen cabinet full of those single serving cereal boxes, direct from the factory.

“Got 20 minutes free, how ‘bout a fast brunch?/ Pitch me whatever proposals you want/ No promises though, I’ve got a lot on my plate/ No ham omelettes, I’m on my conglomerate” (“Money Machine”)
Note: egg whites only if you want to get on Curren$y’s good side.

“Tomato soup and grilled cheese/ hope it make it to my room before I leave” (“Fly Out (Part Tres)”)
Look, this room service would be faster if we were using low-quality ingredients, but this is aged cheddar and taleggio, bruh.

MAIN COURSES

“Cooking all kinds of bull[bleep]/ succotash stuck to the dishes/ wonder why I won’t eat with ya” (from “Example”)
We knew this potluck plan was going to backfire sooner or later. Just go ahead and take Spitta to a restaurant.

“Running circles around them/ they’re rotisserie chickens” (“BBS”).
No, totally, Curren$y loves your idea and really wants to hear more. Drumstick, er, um, drum-roll please.

“Roll bamboos in the Bahamas, mama/ It’s either that or them strawberry coladas” (“Breakfast”)
Cocktails on the beach, and we assume you mean a good bamboo shoot salad here, right? Sounds relaxing to us.

ROLE MODEL

Cindy Crawford isn't just a pretty face—she's also a successful businesswoman

ABOUT LAST NIGHT

Luis Gomez

» lgomez@tribune.com

» @aboutluisgomez

What has supermodel Cindy Crawford—who was hard to miss in the '80s and '90s thanks to her countless magazine covers and Pepsi and Revlon commercials, not to mention her MTV show "House of Style"—been up to the past few years?

A lot more than you might think.

The 46-year-old DeKalb native now focuses on her Style home accessories line, Home furniture line, Meaningful Beauty skin care line, and, of course, her husband and nightlife impresario Rande Gerber, owner of The Whiskey Bar & Grill in the Gold Coast, and their two children.

Crawford also is heavily involved in charity work, spurred on in part by the death of her younger brother from leukemia when she was 10, and appeared Saturday at Starlight Children's Foundation Midwest's 26th annual gala at The Standard Club. The foundation aids children with serious illnesses and injuries, and helps their families cope through entertainment and education.

"It's a different kind of busy," Crawford said by phone last week from her home in Malibu, Calif. "Early in my career, I was pretty much in front of the camera every day. Now I'm only in front of the camera two days a week. Other days I'm in a product development meeting or production meeting. It keeps me busy, but I'm still able to pick the kids up from school half the time."

Crawford, who dined at Paris Club on Friday before heading upstairs to hang out at Studio Paris, said she has learned to say "No" more often to gigs.

"I used to be like, 'Why not?'" Crawford said. "Now it's more like, 'Why?'"

HOT DATE

JULY 15

That's when "Breaking Bad" will return to AMC for its fifth and final season of meth and madness. thr.com reports. Eight episodes will air this summer, and the second eight will be saved for summer 2013. Western series "Hell on Wheels" also returns for a second season Aug. 12.

Still rolling

Though she wasn't in attendance, Adele still cleaned up at Sunday's Billboard Music Awards, claiming 12 prizes, including top artist. Pop-dance duo LMFAO won six trophies, and Miley Cyrus got all the buzz for her revealing white tuxedo top on the red carpet.

Even badder

Here we go. Michael Jackson's "Bad" returns Sept. 18 with new music and never-before-seen concert video in the first re-release of a full album from the King of Pop's catalog since he died in 2009, Jackson's record company and estate said Monday.

Dead serious

There are violent TV shows, and then there are these: "Spartacus: Vengeance," "The Vampire Diaries," "The Walking Dead" and "Game of Thrones" deliver the most deaths per episode, according to a new study. The study of 40 TV shows averaged 132 dead bodies a week, according to funeralwise.com, a site that tells readers "everything you need to know about funerals."

That's hot

If you were to guess which celeb readers helped place on Maxim's Hot 100, whom would it be? Pippa Middleton? Nicki Minaj? Shakira? Nope, it's Stephen Colbert, who landed on "the definitive list of the world's most beautiful women" (at No. 69). We won't try to figure that one out. Instead we'll give you the top 10.
